

ANDY SCHANSBERG

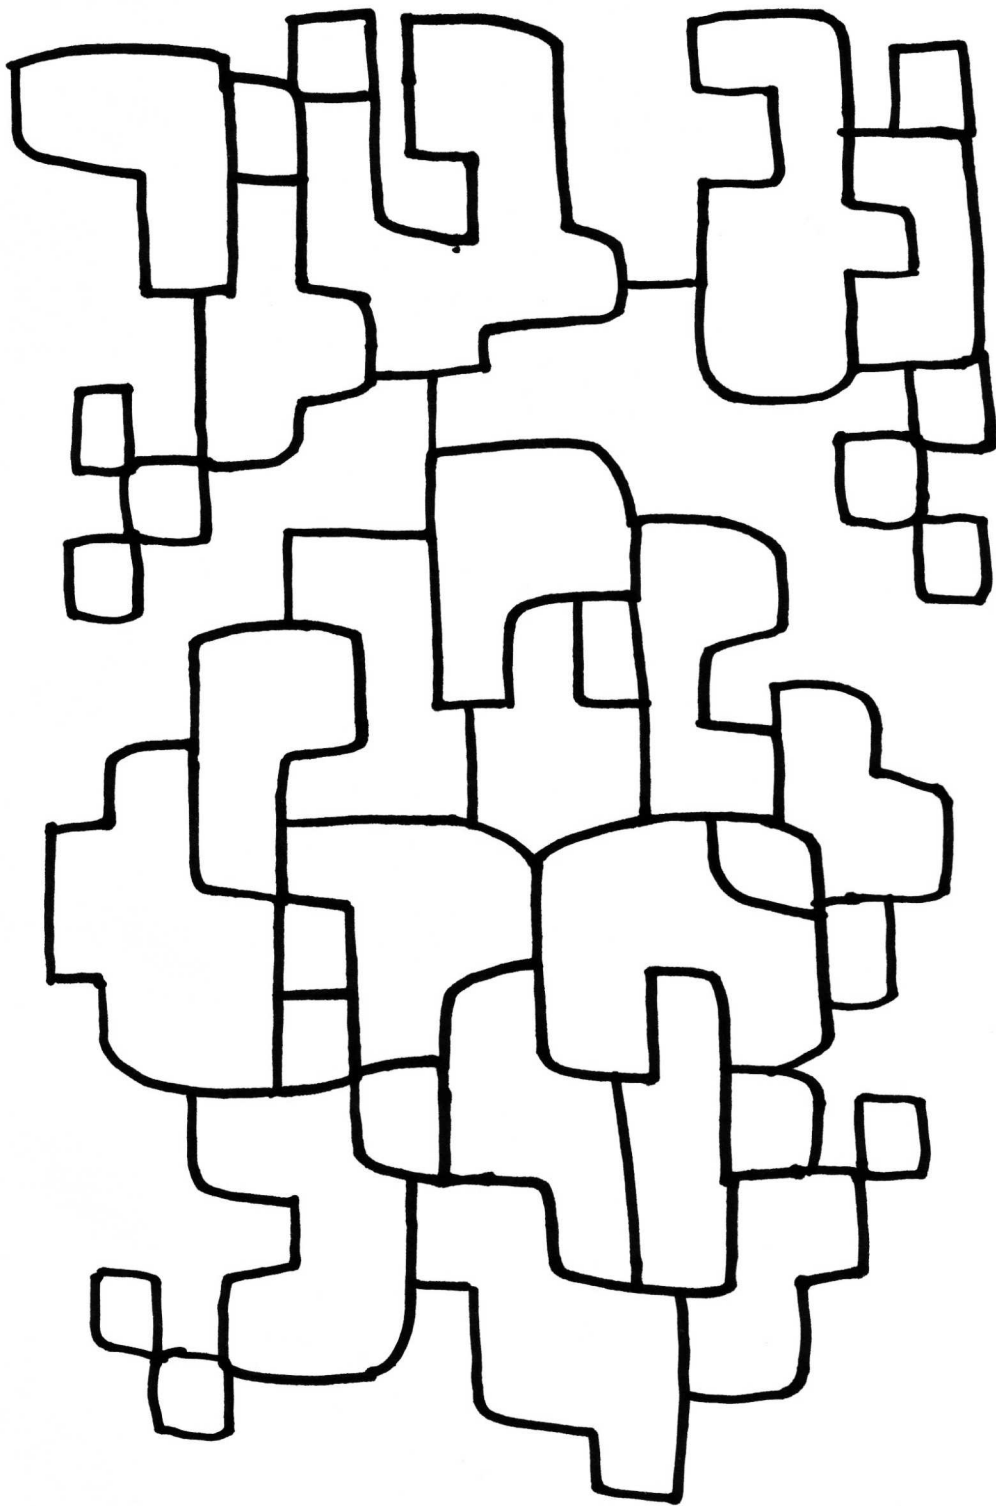

Letter
Drawings

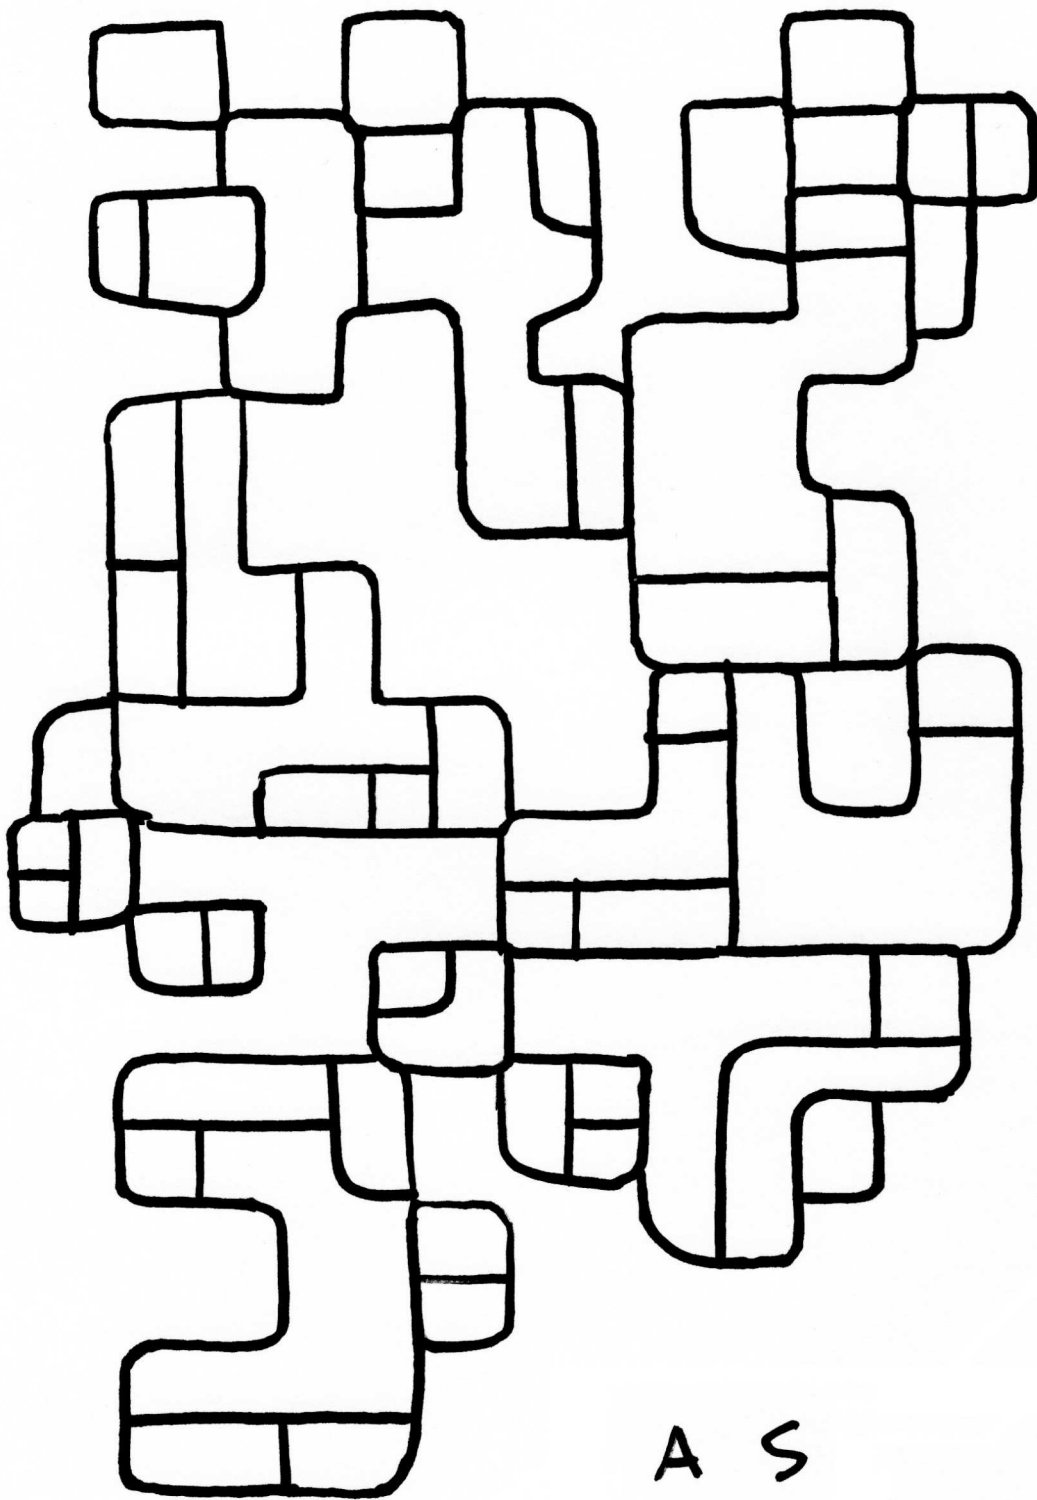

I have been drawing since I was a child. Early on, I would often sit and draw buildings - real, and sometimes imagined, other times objects, stacked books or boxes, and furniture. When I had run out of things to draw, I would play with graph paper, drawing on and off the grids making geometric compositions. As a teen, I used my skill in drawing to create blueprints for skate ramps and when I got to art school, drawing became a tool to flesh out sculptural ideas and as a precursor to paintings. I have always kept my drawings close to the vest as they are often the early stages of unrealized ideas. Drawings can be so many things, notes to self, a reprise from words or a meditation in the form of lines. I enjoy what a moment was taken to draw can do for one's day, as it is a crucial part of what I do and at this point it's good to always have what translates to something musical, constantly playing in the background. I have gone through and done my best to prepare these recent lines for viewing. This book represents a selection of drawings, from a year where I returned to a mode of drawing daily with markers of various sizes and colors on 8.5 x 11-inch size paper - what is commonly referred to as letter paper, thus the title of the book.
